...and Kyroot said:

Those who criticize the past are deaf to the past, and those who fear the future cannot see the future.

...and Kyroot said:

I know of this certain, foreign universe, subject to the general weight of creation, with sentient creatures whose "family tradition" continually dies yet perpetually survives.

...and Kyroot said:

The normal brain
 Is no loyal friend,
  Save to its Own silent ancestors.

...and Kyroot said:

The mostly unknown, (though largely allegorical), Famous Tritainium Triplets were one day discussing their individual views of man's most beneficial technological milepost in the long march to progress, and the first one said, "Without any doubt it is the general development of the field of electronics.", and the second one added, "Why be hesitant, more specifically, I would say, would be the invention of television.", and the third one countered, "Ah, brilliant choice, but I would refine it to the ultimate development of colour television.", and the fourth one finessed by saying, "Nope, tis the volume control."

...and Kyroot said:

The more simple, and the more complex are the two least mechanically inclined to tell you
"what kinda guy they are".

...(Although this should be of no practical
use to you personally,
it is noteworthy to know.)

...and Kyroot said:

It is being rumored in some quarters, (and debated in other half crowns), that low cholesterol prevents proverbs.

...and Kyroot said:

No matter how they may define it, rhapsodize it, no matter how many beauty contests they hold, or swim suit issues they publish, man finds the ultimate resplendence, the supreme beauty to be - not an object, no my lovelies, but the enchantress - habit!

...(Think about it calmly, and see if all the visible evidence does not preclude the preeminence of any other competitor.)

...and Kyroot said:

This one ole sore-head with a patch was really letting life have it one day, "Sometimes I get a special thrill over the stupidity of humanity, and the futility of their lives...just look at science, their 'grand achievement', and especially an area such as mathematics where they tried to finally come up with an intelligent, objective language that would be free of human bias, and personal prejudice, and look what good it did 'em - Hah!, ...See what I mean?" , and his better turned son said, "Seven."

...and Kyroot said:

A reading from the book, "A Child's Garden Of Verse For The Extremely Unruly Child";

"I have a little friend who thinks for me,
I have a little friend who speaks for me,
I have a little friend who's not really my friend at all, but who is me - Ha ha ha!
But no, seriously, folks..."

...and Kyroot said:

In this one system a new game, "Quell The Disturbance" is sweeping their neurons; this system will add little to the Gross National Product.

...and Kyroot said:

Another guy who obviously , if not indubitably, recognizes the power, if not the terror, of words tells me that he's changing his name to Bill "just to throw
'em off the trail."

...and Kyroot said:

At some other time at this one place, there was a kind of cultish little collection of people who's leader one day accidentally cut off a finger, and the next occasion when they all met, and the followers expressed their concern over his missing digit he covered himself by immediately declaring that his injury was a predictable result of a certain "mystical ritual" to which they were not privy, and several days later when they next met many of the faithful were missing a finger, whilest those others who still had some potential were simply missing.

...and Kyroot said:

Stiffening joints have made more men metaphysical poets than any dose of spiritual compassion.

...and Kyroot said:

I once became acquainted with a man who for many years toiled over his "grand epic poem"
which centered around
the theme,
"Those things I once did see,
I gradually see no more.",
(and you might care to know this was in regards
not to his growing blind,
but to his growing up.)

...and Kyroot said:

To more completely fill the unknown definition of a "Real Revolutionist", or a "Neural Subversive", a person should have almost no ordinary
"psychological inner life."

...and Kyroot said:

Many think that peace, recognition, and satisfaction comes through forces outside the person, the rest believe they must come from within the man himself, and god bless 'em, they're both just
as cute as can be.

...and Kyroot said:

It's true in kindergarten, it's true at Harvard; you can nibble now,
and still gnaw on
it later, but no matter what you try to do about it -
talk is time.

...and Kyroot said:

Messages arrive from all directions, information comes in from all corners; thankfully, it doesn't all pile up on you, eh what.

...and Kyroot said:

It's hard to frighten people on the red planet by shouting, "Vermilion".

...and Kyroot said:

They can see the cities fall,
They can hear the crowned heads roll,
But some know a revolution known to none.

...and Kyroot said:

Trans-axial camping lore passed from many an ole rebel to another;

Skin and smoke the obvious,soon as possible,

For many days of snackin' lie ahead.