

12/7/87

... and Kyrrot once again added:

~~☒~~ I caught The Man who Actually Knows How Life Works, talking again to some of His "That's Entertainment" Church flock, and what He was saying was this, "Could any of you conceive of the possibility of "The Secret" I refer to being in fact, secret, because it might be ridiculous?"

What if almost every one had thought of "The Secret" at least once in their life, but it was just so ridiculous that they forthwith forgot it.

Could you ~~conceive~~ ^{imagine} such a ridiculous thing? CAN ANY of you conceive of such a ridiculous, albeit entertaining possibility?"

...and Kyroot said:

The Real Revolutionist realizes two distinct ways to move, and attack. One is to just do what you intend to do with no comment. The other approach is in the area of thinkig-of-action, that being, you widely announce your intentions, and let the words themselves have their effect.

...and Kyroot said:

It is during the chase that the harmones-of-the-spirit are most active,
not after the capture. The blood boils
in battle, not in victory.

...and Kyroot said:

Is it true that things are beautiful, or not within themselves, and praise, or lack of it has no bearing on it. OR,
is praise
and recognition
a real part of 3-D beauty?

...and Kyroot said:

In the City I have heard some comments as, "Hell is people by the pious", and, "Hell is filled with good intentions.", but if there could be any truth-to-the-matter it would be this,
"Hell is littered with graved invitations."

...and Kyroot said:

I guess, if you really wanted to, you could look upon excessive talk as being a virus, (and one that is unbelievably contagious.)

...and Kyroot said:

In the course of a single, 24 human-hour-period, I heard all of the following: "Rivers are ceaseless.", "The sky is infinite.", "God is merciful.", and, "Men die in the morning, and are born at night."

L had to lay down and take a nap.

...and Kyroot said:

Should the Recruits be told to look upon their inner struggle with themselves as an "invasion", a hostile, aggressive attack?, or as a "liberation", the helpful act of one friend to another?

...and Kyroot said:

When it comes to the actual protection of one's temporary,
revolutionary abode, is it more efficient to "tell"
people to "stay away" (barking)?, or to literally "keep them away"
(biting)?

(Much avoidable weariness arises from one's apparent inability to make, and move on this decision.)

...and Kyroot said:

Two thousand years ago I heard it said that "Rarely does valor and wit reside in one man." Then a thousand years later t'was noted that "You will not find honor and piety in the same soul." And after that I heard such notions as, "Never does beauty and intelligence dwell together.", and "Seldom can you discover within one person both virtue and courage.". Now what I want to know is this: With you humans, just what'n hell DOES go together?

...and Kyroot said:

The Comparison of Views Reagrding The Same Area From Differring Sources:
"I believe that in the end the truth will endure.", taken from, A Short History of The English People, vs
"I believe that in the end the tall will prevail.", from, A History Of The Short English People.

...and Kyroot said:

One of the most difficult things for recruits to rememebr is that you can never triumph, much less get slashed and stronger in wisdom if you do not engage in combat.

You can plan, dream, and thrash about in the bushes until the bartenders come home, but you will remain undecorated, and will never see any new sights, gain any new ground, or acquire meaningful scars.

...and Kyroot said:

Riches without power is at best only a third of real wealth.

...AND Kyroot said:

Proverb Update: Original version, "When Nature made him She broke the mold."

Improved rendition,"When Nature made him She broke the bounds of good taste."

Why, why, and then some more, "why", I ask you, has reason always been declared the enemy of faith?, intelligence, the foe
of feeling?
Why does the son so mistrust
his father?

...and Kyroot said:

The Revolutionist knows that as far as the People are concerned, if nothing else, it can at least,
truly be said, "They will boldly go where everyone else has gone before."

...and Kyroot said:

To have a really good act requires simply that you have one truly
"great number."

My act IS my life:
my life is my act.

And the ordinary would ask, "But what do we do for an encore?", and the Revolutionist replies,
"I AM my own encore."

...and Kyroot said:

Don't forget, whilest temporarily languishing in the City: If it took 3 Men to play the bassoon
we would not need oars.

...and Kyroot said:

Is it some kind of presently unrealized cosmic law that only pitifully serious Men can write on serious matters?

...and Kyroot said:

History eventually teaches everybody a thing or two, (especially the dead).

...and Kyroot said:

The Revolutionist sez, "If it ain't irrelevant its of no interest to me."

...and Kyroot said:

Anything that can be named can be found to have a verbal superior;
thus the People keep re-defining,
and re-inventing their gods.

...and Kyroot said:

The People will watch, or listen to almost ANYTHING rather than having nothing to do.

...and Kyroot said:

As opposed to good, solid ordinary info, Revolutionary data is somehow kinda wistful, even windblown.

...and Kyroot said:

Although Life makes Men hope, believe, even expect otherwise, the Revolutionist knows that the People are going to be feeling just about how they feel now.

...and Kyroot said:

Perhaps the most shameful, even fatal mistake, is to believe that in any matter, any word is the final word.

...and Kyroot said:

The one cry, that even the most entrenched, blase City dweller dreads to hear, "You gotta pay retail."

...and Kyroot said:

An apropos slogan can be, "If it works, use it.", but a subtle zinger lurking there-about is the fact that if a Real Revolutionist "uses it" (whatever it is), it will work.

...and Kyroot said:

In the City, the most effective disguise of all is probably to go-naked.

...and Kyroot said:

While believing Himself free of "prying ears", I heard a certain Revolutionist say to Himself,
"You know what particularly impresses me about you?. that even just between us two, when I leave a provocative, and inviting opening, you still decline to talk about yourself."

(About as tough as a re-fried combat boot,
and a good bit more sensitive.)

...and Kyroot said:

I once heard a Revolutionist say the following to several of His would-be cohorts: "Could any of you conceive of the possibility that the intriguing, elusive "secret" to which I often refer might in fact be a secret simply because it is so ridiculous?

"What if almost everyone had at least, once in their life, actually thought of the secret, but it was so ridiculous that they immediately forgot about it.

"Could you imagine such a ridiculous thing? Can any of you conceive of such a ridiculous, albeit, entertaining possibility?