

...and Kyroot said:

Regardless of its oftentimes bewildering, and frightening appearances

This Thing is a holy endeavor; however, the proper understanding of the word "holy" is available only in the mind of tomorrow.

Thus it is that "goodness-as-growth" does prevail, but Mans' perception thereof forever remains a day behind.

...and Kyroot said:

Words are as blood to the Yellow/Circuit, food for the mind, and you must take direct responsibility for this area of nourishment, the same as you would oversee the intake of fit food for the physical circuits.

...and Kyroot said:

This Thing is indeed like the planning and construction of a tri-functional space flight, and while at first it seems overwhelming in complexity, and the destination far away,
it later reveals a warm simplicity with an objective as close as tomorrow.

...and Kyroot said:

The excuse of, "I didn't intend that result" for one's speech, or behavior is not even conditionally acceptable for those on this flight.
Although not morally, or legally prohibited, for the Few it is a compounding of a circuitry felony.

(And the only court of appeals here is in one's own determinatic not to look back with the equal commitment to by-pass the
illusionary present.
In such sterile
halls-of-justice
no excuse can breed and survive

...and Kyroot said:

Although I have often reminded you that This is not the critic of Man, when any of its messages still strike you as such you are what could presently be called a bulls-eye in search of an arrow.

...and Kyroot said:

No system can properly describe its homeland, or origins.

This you should Consider from the far level of why Man's mythological tales can never mention the fountainhead of the gods, to the more personal area of why one cannot trace the source of one's own program.

...and Kyroot said:

In the greater expansion of the triaxial-world, there is the power of a tempo-spectrum wherein some things move too swiftly, and others too slowly to be perceived by ordinary consciousness.

The overcoming of this present deficiency is not through improved technology, but by refined awareness.

...and Kyroot said:

I once heard a Man say that we must all, "row the boat we have",
but that completely overlooks the possibility of trading in your oars for an outboard motor.

...and Kyroot said:

It is incorrect to say that certain behavior is "emotional" as opposed to "intellectual", or any other alternative, in that none of Man's individual circuits are the true source of his actions.

(What could be non-verbally said is, "Good day to you, Senor Primal Flow", and "Greetings, Senorita Grid.")

...and Kyroot said:

Anything that any Man may be driven to say is true from the charge of one triaxial viewpoint.

This includes those views that may strike your particular charge as grossly slanderous, distorted and dangerous. But at the greater level it is no more confusing, or disruptive than the process of growth itself.

...and Kyroot said:

Man does not "attempt too much too soon", Life does, and then must back up a bit to stablize itself for yet another run at tomorrow.

...and Kyroot said:

In Considering the actual life-of-Life, I once heard someone ponder the question of "What does Life do for a living?", and the answer of course, is, live.
Life lives for a living.

What
about
you?

...and Kyroot said:

All real change requires that you pay a price.

Everyone dreams of the merchandise, and likewise smiles at the cost

(I will note the possibilities of personally abolishing th first-of-the-month, and of turning debits into credits so that your master card shows a positive balance on that great horizontal day of dead reckoning.)

...and Kyroot said:

I once heard a mortal pundit conclude that, "The winds and tides are always on the side of the ablest navigator", which sounds fine unless you realize that Man has never known where the hell He was going anyway.

("So Much For Truisms", part 6.)

...and Kyroot said:

The kind of great, immediate, and immutable change of which Men dream is impossible in that they are unknowing entertaining ideas of setting one single Force free to run wild; which, if such could be accomplished, would reveal a force of unimaginable madness and destruction.

(Tolerances however, are possible at a micro degree that would be intolerable on a macro level.

An artist of questionable talent though recognized in Heathhill would be ignored, if not trampled in London.

...and Kyroot said:

The ultimate are of This Thing is in being able to See that which is yet unnamed.

The ultimate science is in being able to repel the force of repetition.

...and Kyroot said:

The accusations passed from Man to Man are as a search and demand for D-responses.

Man is constructed
to thusly respond,
and necessary energies
go on their merry way

(Here on the Project site of course, the working slogan is that "The only good such response is a short-wired response")

...and Kyroot said:

If you're not attempting something "new,new, new" everyday in all circuits, then you're doing something, "what, what,
what?"

(You haven't forgotten the seven deadly sins of,
repetition, repetition, repetition, repetition, repetition, repetition, and repetition?)

...and Kyroot said:

I have heard human scientists state that "nature's not interested in productivity, only survival.", which would bear some validity were it not for Man's presence here.

...and Kyroot said:

When the ordinarily religious say that "We must be prepared to suffer for our beliefs." they unknowing mean that, "Although we are D-peoples we must brace ourselves for the appearance of C-influences

...and Kyroot said:

There are the vacuum-points even within one's own yellow/circuit activity, and you must be prepared to willfully fill these openings between ordinary thought process, or else the flow of the Grid will make its own mechanical connections, and there you'll be again.

...and Kyroot said:

There is a danger here on the construction site of certain peoples living too much in their own heads.
If you feel such a scene tugging at your sleeve, do something ordinary; hit your thumb with a hammer, for instance.

(It would also be good if you can learn to do such things in a non-physical fashion.)

...and Kyroot said:

Always be the first to say "Hello", and the first to bid "Adieu."

...and Kyroot said:

Since its inevitable anyway, you might as well go ahead and start being non-sad & serious now & get used to it.

(You know, those who say that practice makes perfect obviously were never in bed with an accordian)

...and Kyroot said:

Have any of you yet to figure out why so much of people's nightmares about themselves is sexual in nature?

Have any of you yet to figure out anything?

What's better than a good laugh for the confused.

...and Kyroot said:

While Life, on one level, moves slowly and gradually, Men, on their level are driven to react and comment immediately.

...and Kyroot said:

The missing blood ingredient I have mentioned is in part, the inability of Man's circulation to tolerate and transport a stronger mix of C-type nourishment to the brain.

Real Emotion resides within particular cells in the C-blood, and is that which is necessary for real change both within Man and Life. You must expand and make your circulatory system strong enough to handle this emotion enriched, C-type blood. This is the secret to drastic change, and the escape from repetition.

...and Kyroot said:

At the ordinary level of binary consciousness, all thoughts and maps seem to come to ends of sentences, and to edges of papers, while on an expanded level they are circulatory.

If one attempted to trace the source of electrical power in one's home, he might first refer to the power stations feeding directly into the residence; then trace its power to the near-by rivers turning the turbines, then connect this to the rainfall that feeds the rivers. But then one must put Man's presence into the line of enquiry, whose existence produces the proper atmospheric conditions for the cycle of rain-evaporation-rain, and thus you are returned to the home of the Man from whence you began the search.

And just think: This is on a relatively simple level, and yet such matters elude the continuing grasp of ordinary consciousness.

...and Kyroot said:

Why does the cry of, "We'll go down with the ship" only arise from areas of landlocked captains?????

...and Kyroot said:

Why does the cry of, "There'll be a better life bye-&-bye" arise from those who can't seem to get it right this time around?

...and Kyroot said:

Why is the cry of, "Hey, come over here quick." always followed by either disappointment, or a fist fight?

...and Kyroot said:

Ordinary Men often claim that they are only "doing what god tells me to do.", and they are unknowingly correct; however, they cannot properly identify the charge of their particular driving-force-god, nor can they ever see that "he" is but one third of the total force, and subject to change his charge faster than a rabbi can insult a pig.

The "gods", that is, the three major manifestations of the Primal Flow, are speaking to, and through Man, but you must have a good connection, and be sure of the origins of the call.

...and Kyroot said:

Further Hints Regarding E-Flow, (part.11): Consider the ways in which Man uses the idea of the unknown in His everyday speech, as when He says such things as: "Although the balance of trade has reached a dangerous level of disequilibrium, for some reason the dollar is stronger than ever in foreign markets, so who is to say what truly lies ahead?"

The continuing unknown variables lying just beyond the boundaries of the binary outlook.

...and Kyroot said:

Anything, including day dreams, that causes suffering is D-based,
no matter what "spiritual" words may be involved in its description.

You must learn to shift the center toward the "C", or else just ignore it, whatever it may be.

...and Kyroot said:

What Men call differing "viewpoints" are in fact like different electrical charges with each of the varying views acting as opposing charges furnishing friction necessary for growth.

...and Kyroot said:

How is it, do you suppose, that things are arranged in such a way that I can explain the way inwhich things are arranged.

...and Kyroot said:

What Man refers to as "information" equals "food", and Life develops and grows through Man's expanding ability to accept and process new food.

(From this basis you might also be able to see ordinary psychology as a study of "what-people" swapping recipies.)

...and Kyroot said:

When ordinary people pursue activities mechanically pertinent to their own systems they are seeking small amounts of new food/energy, but this is so controlled by their present position in the energy-grid as to cause red-circuit-people to seek out only new sports, and yellow-circuit-people to search for new books, and soon all possible nooks and crannies are filled, and low level boredom reigns anew.

It is in your own expansion of areas designed for the future that freedom from this stagnation lies.

...and Kyroot said:

Most of Man's "arts" are but D's reminder of its continuing influence.

(So much for Michaelangelo, Merle Haggard, and Reader's Digest)

...and Kyroot said:

How alluring, captivating, and strangely satisfying to immediately feel and voice opposition to the new and unexpected.

How foreign, elusive, and curiously disturbing to be a channel for the fresh and surprising.

This is not due to "individual psychological problems", but is rather, a reflection of a complex chemical reality.

...and Kyroot said:

Man is hard-wired for stagnation.

His perceptions of his own circuitry are based on binary programs, and nothing less than access to the main frame will reveal data necessary for extenuation of the system.

...and Kyroot said:

You can note how all mortally perceivable pursuits, structures and institutions will in time, loose their extreme variations, and settle somewhere in the more placid, middle areas of the Wave Phenomena.

Extremes always herald coming change in the charge of a certain nexus in the Grid, inevitably followed by a leveling-out period in preparation for yet another change.

Men too, are once given to mechanical extremities, but soon fall in the hands of the Phillistines-of-familiarity.

(At what age did you shed your extremes?, and where oh where, did you leave that shocking coat, or dress of many disturbing colors?)

...and Kyroot said:

Anything that Man is driven to say exists, exists, and at its proper level can be weighed, measured and altered.

This includes those things overwhich there may be wide spread opposition regarding their very existance, but the debate and conflict is a part of their very existance.

...and Kyroot said:

There comes the times that This Thing must unfold to the outside,
not infold on itself.

This is true on the external level of the Group, and on the internal level of you.

...and Kyroot said:

There is the allure of the new, the grip of the familiar, and everything, my friends, everything else.

...and Kyroot said:

All forms of ordinary resistance are but a further settling down to the comforts of one's own cell.

...and Kyroot said:

For any of you still doubtful of the power of the past, the strength of that-which-has-already-been, let me ask you this: Why do all great "holy men" have the persistant inclination to be dead?