No external revolution is viable unless preceded by an inner one.

It remains surprising the number of ways people find to cheat themselves.

Life's growth continues in both areas of the Calm, and the Excited.

Same garden,

different

There is only Action, and Thoughts-Of-Action, but

Thinking-of-Action IS an action,

and

no human action is possible with out some thought,

so.....

Is "to live" merely to breathe?,
or is some more radical action necessary?

The so-called "vices" of the king might be seen as virtues in the Revolutionist.

An ordinary person's religion is probably the most ordinary thing about them.

...and Kyroot said:

Is the Revolutionist to battle with the nature of Man, or the nature of His societies?

Are you to rebel against
your own genes,
or your enviorns?

Is it all designed to make
you more civilized,
or more radical
and free?

...and Kyroot said:

If you fear, much less respect, any power, or authority,

you are no Real Revolutionist.

The study of the chemistry-of-Mans'-nervous-system is the proper inquiry regarding matters
spiritual.

...and Kyroot said:

It is sometimes said that revolutionaries do not chose their course, but are forced into action by the ignorance, indifference, and dead weight of the prevailing powers.

The ultimate,
"They made me do it."
(and right on
the money
at that.)

Once this kind of revolutionary knowledge is present in one person, at one locale,
the odds against others
having it also increases such that if it were initially one chance in
a million,
it then becomes one
chance in ten billion.

The Real Revolutionist must be free from ordinary fears, hopes, angers, or expectations.

If you're not interested in new systems, hotter circuits, expanding forces, and parallel realities,
then they're not
interested in you.

So, "There."

In some manner, you must re-make, re-shape your very self,

from the inside out,

or

from the outside in.

Attention Earthlings, one-more-note: You people are free to do anything you like,
such as believe that you're free to do anything you like.....

Who has ever seen a revolution conducted calmly?

Whenever someone finally reaches for their holy book, abd says, "Well, let us see what god had to say about this matter," call 911

When the ordinary are forty, fat, and fatigued

it's short stuff
to become religious.

War is a form of social readjustment, a change in control, perhaps.

But it is not a break in the Power Chain.

Only the Real Revolutionists desire freedom,

or can even tolerate it.

The rest wish only

for

proper domination.

When the ordinary run out of facts they will forever resort to statistics.

(It is part of the establishment's job to make Men accept numbers as vital information.)

A so-called "spiritual Man" who consorts, comforts and bows to a king makes a pimp look downright wholesome.

If efficiency ain't your name,
change ain't your game.

Intellect withou passion is like having a map, but no desire to travel.

(If Gulf, or Chevron ever learn to bottle it we'll all need second jobs.)

...and Kyroot said:

Physicists continue to say that they hope, dream, and assume there is one, simple, beautiful law at the base of all creation, but that they increasingly fear they may never find it.

Their YellowSystems' musings are blind to the possibility that Mans' present state of consciousness may simply be physically incapable of such sight.

Further Revolutionary Points To Ponder, (or Sharpen, as the case may be):

When the information of a land is controlled by elephants do you really expect to ever see pachydermal exposés?

What can be thought, said, or writ that is new, fresh, and stimulating that does not, in some way, threaten the peace.

...and Kyroot said:

Everything — Everything is but a component, an element, a mere ingredient;
everything but the Primal Flow Itself.

Let me also add that no Real Revolutionist will ever settle for being simply a part of
anything,

I don't care
what'tha hell
it is.
