

* 8/6/87-(1)*

(should have been 8/20/87)

...and Kyroot said:

Hey, you really gotta be careful; it's a molecular jungle out there...
(and it's pretty investated in here too.)

1) INPested

10) LINEAR

20) AND THEN THEY CAN ... ?

...and Kyroot said:

Ordinary religions and philosophy deal in a world of "but". They state Man's apparent problems then offer a "but" as the seeming edge of their proffered map.

Promising-up the illusion
of a stable, bianry conclusion.

The Real Revolutionist, however,

will NEVER take "but"
for an answer.

...and Kyroot said:

No matter what you may presently believe, everyone does see their life
"as it truly is", they just can't describe it to anyone, including themselves.

...and Kyroot said:

The People live a life that is not much more than a program of "crisis control", while the Revolutionist deals in creating crisis.

...and Kyroot said:

"Watch out" when the People get a stomach ache, when a civilization gets the cramps.

...and Kyroot said:

Due to all of His blither, and palaver, it's sometimes difficult to tell exactly what Men think they mean when they speak of their "gods", but once I may have been close in proximity to one of his Deities when I ran into a mighty procession, and a thunderous voice cried out,
"Stand Aside For The Arrival Of The Infamous
Big Daddy Chaos."

...and Kyroot said:

The Real Revolutionist is He who can use a map with no boundries;
one who can handle a paper
with no edges.

...and Kyroot said:

Ordinary Rulers are wont to display a peculiar smile whenever they speak of "power as their heavy responsibility."

The weight of a crown, however,
never seems to break a royal neck, (nor hardly to even effect posture.)

...and Kyroot said:

Is "useage" the highest authority?, or does "efficiency" have the final say?

And who can discern a difference tween the two?

...and Kyroot said:

The Ruling Powers look upon a stable hierarchy, and the concept of linear nobility as indispensable to crowd control, while the Revolutionist looks on it with disgust.

...and Kyroot said:

Those who can, do, and those who can't, buy guns.

...and Kyroot said:

A revolutionist with morality is no revolutionist at all.

...and Kyroot said:

There are no such creatures as "misconceptions", just CONceptions you're not wired to agree with.

...and Kyroot said:

The real Minister Of Propaganda is he who can say, "The King is actually more attractive than he looks."

(An up-and-coming usurper might add,
"And his ideas are actually better than they sound.")

...and Kyroot said:

All uncoverings are sumptuous, but the ultimate one is the one you can't describe.

...and Kyroot said:

Ordinary consciousness perceives time as being that which separates all things, while 4-dimensional sight would reveal it to be the ultimate unifier.

Time does not divide events,
but rather,
unites them
so that finally what Man surveys, He understands.

...and Kyroot said:

Ordinary critics continue to note that, "In Nature, those creatures who toil the most have the most, while in the artificiality of human society, those who toil the most (the poor), have the least."

Now I query you: From one view this is apparently so; and for what unseen purpose might Life have for this seemingly unjust arrangement?

...and Kyroot said:

On "this level", the Few are their own tomorrow.

...and Kyroot said:

The Rulers believe that every perceptive person is a potential enemy.

...and Kyroot said:

The People are forever whinning about the "struggle to find justice", as if it were lost, and when they can no more escape from it than space can excuse itself from the universe.

One reason
the idea of justice is so often discussed and debated is that every Man has some notion of what it is
and they all vary from the correct one.

...and Kyroot said:

The Man with no change of trunks will never learn to swim.

...and Kyroot said:

If indeed, all people have their "separate, yet equal problems" where are passionate defenders and activists for the rich and powerful?

...and Kyroot said:

The Real Revolutionist would refuse to be a stuffed, smiling head on Life's Trophy Wall.

...and Kyroot said:

It is only the most base of tyrants, and the most sportive of radicals who live beyond their expectations.

...and Kyroot said:

More, "Shortest Distances Between Two Points": The spans from a heritic to a saint:
from a rebell to a despot;
from an antimated-investigator to a sofa-sore-head.

...and Kyroot said:

Which do you suspect would present the greater danger to the would-be Revolutionist, for the People to proclaim you their "most just citizen"?, or their
"biggest rafe"?

(Is there room for a blade between "loyal opposition"
and sedition?)

...and Kyroot said:

If Man's imagined gods were to materially appear the neighborhood would be wrecked.

They would prove to be the kind of folks who'd immediately begin to park their cars on the street, and begin using their garages as storerooms for junk and stuff.

...and Kyroot said:

If you know ANYthing at all, extraordinary, and talk much at all,
you probably talk too much.

It is those parts of Life's operations furthestest from "consciousness-central" that make the most noise.

So,
if you ever wonder whether you talk too much —
you do.

...and Kyroot said:

What the People call "faith" is just fear dressed up like Cinderella.

...and Kyroot said:

If you ever wonder if you "think too little",
you do.

...and Kyroot said:

The Real Revolutionist knows that if things don't look right,
they ain't right.

(And things that sound funny
ARE funny.)