

...and Kyroot said:

Could a Real Revolutionist use the idea of having a house that seemed almost
"un-lived in" internally?

He himself, leaving almost no trace OF Himself

IN Himself?

...and Kyroot said:

With ordinary, 3-D consciousness, you can never measure the infinite, or the too vague.

...and Kyroot said:

Sign in the City, "Dozen Roses, $5.95, or $9.95", and guy asks the difference. "Four dollars a dozen" is replied. "Yeah, I know that, but what's the difference in the roses?" "None", comes the reply, "Same roses, its just that you can either pay $5.95, or $9.95."

As I have said befour, if not five, there MAY be hope for the City yet.

...and Kyroot said:

I heard that one City organization had as its motto the following, "Help for the living, hope for the dead."

I think I'll withhold comment until someone reverses this credo.

...and Kyroot said:

Everything that most People do is just an excuse.

...and Kyroot said:

Anyone in the City who seriously proclaims how "impressed they are" with the intelligence of some other City-itte is, if I may re-turn a phrase, pretty easily, im-dammed-pressed.

8/31/88-(7)

...and Kyroot said:

The 11th Commandment Of The Bushes: Don't be wasteful.

Even should your efforts seem useless or unnecessary, don't be wasteful.

...and Kyroot said:

Read in a City book the following statement: "A single, large vice in a Man is apt to keep out many smaller ones.", but how about my addendum: Big - I mean REALLY big vices may just keep a Man from noticing lesser ones. For instance, who today remembers Attila's simply dreadful habit of always interrupting other people?

...and Kyroot said:

Should you prefer to be met by a friendly experience, or a hostile theory?

Too easy?...o.k., try it this way:

Would you prefer to dance with an adversarial theory, or a pleasing experience?

(Call me nothing, if not agreeable, flexible, and not after eleven p.m.)

...and Kyroot said:

"I'll never trust another robin as long as I live.", cried a Man simply DESPERATE for suffering and disappointment.

...and Kyroot said:

A certain City intelligentsia overheard rebuffing his scion, "If the Golden Age of Greece
were alive today,
what would It
have to say about you."

...and Kyroot said:

Any particular goods are not really your hobby if, by once possessing them
they lose their value
and desirability.

...and Kyroot said:

Twas once said that, "Only on the edge of the grave can a Man become conclusive.", but I say, "Only on the edge of conclusion does a Man become grave."

...and Kyroot said:

One City guy was always saying, "They should put me intha book...they should put me intha book...", and finally his wife, and some of his friends pointed out that there WAS no book about guys like him so then he began to always be saying, "They should write tha book...they should write tha book..."

...and Kyroot said:

If questioned on the matter, even superficially, do you believe that ANY body would claim to have meant EVERY thing they ever said?

...and Kyroot said:

There is a certain phenomenon that cosmologists, and others, have yet to discover in City affairs, which is that some things which appear retreating are in fact, advancing.

...and Kyroot said:

Never trust a god with call-holding.

...and Kyroot said:

One ole City guy said, "Life ain't nothing but chaos put in numerical order."

...and Kyroot said:

One City scientist recently stated, "What's scary is that theoretically, your genetic make-up knows everything,
and feels everything that all of humanity has ever gone through.", and a Revolutionist thought,
" 'Theoretically' indeed."

...and Kyroot added:

Theoretically: The supreme adverbial cop-out.

...and Kyroot said:

When the final history of Man is writ, there'll be a LOT of explaining to do.