

...and Kyroot said:

Since almost anything can be a hobby; so can its opposite.

For instance:

If shopping can be a hobby so can not-shopping.

...and Kyroot said:

Lenders have the best memories.

...and Kyroot said:

If your king seems to be developing a taste for practical jokes, move to another kingdom.

...and Kyroot said:

Just "loving somebody" isn't enough.

...and Kyroot said:

A Man who knows what He's doing doesn't need a nick name.

...and Kyroot said:

In a sense, a Real Revolutionist never finds His clothes comfortable, and only truly feels so when plain nakedness is in fashion.

...and Kyroot said:

No matter what you may have heard, read, or imagined amidst City influences, there is no substitute for humans.

...and Kyroot said:

I guess one of Life's more reassuring ploys is in having regular folks believe such stuff as, "Genes don't preDESTINE, they just predispose." Beautiful, no?

...and Kyroot said:

A person whose prime dream is to be a person "other people look up to"
could easily be a manager
of a pigmy pole vaulting team.

...and Kyroot said:

The following IS pretty tricky, but I'll mention it just the same: Proper actions
drive
history from the mind.

...and Kyroot said:

There is this City dude, (or perhaps, a dudette) so current, with-it, and hip that he would weekly
have his tastes cleaned and pressed.

...and Kyroot said:

Insofar as such might be possible, if not appropriate, I guess a Real Revolutionist COULD righteously over do it.

...and Kyroot said:

Once past the age of thirty, one should NOT have dumbness as one's imaginary playmate.

...and Kyroot said:

It's not quite so simple as just telling Life to "go away".

...and Kyroot said:

Over in the damper part of the eastern City sector, I recently overheard the following by-play between two philosophically attired gentlemen. Said the first, "If you didn't have anything to complain about you wouldn't complain." To which the second replied, "Yeah, but if you DIDN'T complain you wouldn't have anything to complain about."

I don't know about you, but that about wraps it up for me.

...and Kyroot said:

There ARE no consequences until you believe there are.

...and Kyroot said:

Tis now reported that there is a Man somewhere near Calcutta who can simply look at people and tell what they're "up to",
"Whatever", he adds,
"may be the significance
thereof."

...and Kyroot said:

A Man's left overs ARE the Man.

...and Kyroot said:

A slogan once reputedly seen over a Revolutionist camp's side entrance:
Everything Passes,
Everything Remains.

...and Kyroot said:

It is extremely ill mannered to be ordinary.