

...and Kyroot said:

A pause in the fighting may not mean much.

...and Kyroot said:

No one should have a hobby smaller than themself.

...and Kyroot said:

At the calm center of all tornados is a quiet, bloody dance floor.

...and Kyroot said:

Nothing succeeds like success, except of course, talking about it.

...and Kyroot said:

Only what He now possesses does a Man know to be true. All else He simply dreams so. (Your present Honda is valid; your hoped for Corvette you imagine so.

...and Kyroot said:

From those trees, over near where you're standing, a voice cried out, "You and your kind ARE the environment."

...and Kyroot said:

All opinions agree in the dark.

...and Kyroot said:

Life is dumber in general than It is in particular.

(Of course, so's everything else.)

...and Kyroot said:

Armistice day should always come on the weekend.

...and Kyroot said:

Only the imperfect expect perfection.

...and Kyroot said:

Those with an agenda will never hear the doorbell ring.

...and Kyroot said:

No gunfire is heard from the cemeteries.

...and Kyroot said:

A Man with a dictionary may still be a Man, but a pig with a clarinet is another matter altogether.

...and Kyroot said:

How is it that to a Revolutionist a story can mean something, not mean something, and then mean something all over again. Just for instance: A guy who claimed to love his dog about as much as a human can love anything always bought the same kind of food for his canine companion, and when asked about his insistence on this one particular brand of dog food, he said that he purchased it because it "looked so yummy to him.", and the questioner replied that such a reason was spurious inasmuch as a Man's sense of the delicious was not necessarily the same as that of a dog, and even less so merely based on its visual appeal to the human, no matter HOW much he may cherish his pet. And the dog's master replied, "May be, but you've missed the whole point.", which he had, didn't, and then some.

How is it, you reckon, that to a Revolutionist life can oftentimes mean something, not mean something, and then mean something all over again?

...and Kyroot said:

In the City, anyone who gives you personal advice of any kind, doesn't know what they're talking about.

...and Kyroot said:

Only the rude ask "Why?"

...and Kyroot said:

If it's "yesterday's news" it's YESTERDAY'S NEWS.

...and Kyroot said:

In a Revolutionist's world there is no such science as Pathology.

...and Kyroot said:

As you skate through life, remember this: The last drop is always either the best, the worst, or unnoticed.

...and Kyroot said:

Son finally asks his father, "Do you have any advice for me?" Father sez,
"No.", son sez,
"Good."