

...and Kyrrot said:

Native creatures trying to tell other natives to change behaviour
native to them is not unlike
a person telling a territorially
aggressive yard dog to "Take Sundays
off."

...and Kyroot said:

The multifactited dramas of the true explorer are not peopled with ordinary heroes, or routine villians, but are filled, and are lived by the men, women, ideas, and forces who actually play out our several scenes, and speak our sundry lines.

...and Kyroot said:

In this one zone I visited, one chap referred to activity such as this
as, "An Inside View Of The Inseam
Of Life's Trousers."

...and Kyroot said:

In this one place I visited, where they kept such accounts, I read in their book of "World Records" a transcript of their "shortest interview", which went as follows:

The interviewer says, "We have with us today Mr. So-and-So, whose unusual ideas are now being widely discussed and debated. Welcome, Mr. So-and-So."

"Hello.", he replies, and the interviewer continues, "Well, first before we actually get into your most provocative ideas will you tell us something of your background."

"No.", he replies, and the interviewer says, "Thank you Sir, and that concludes this interview."

(And oh, when I relayed this story to an earthing he said that that planet might actually someday amount to something if they would also get rid of television, radio, daydreams, nightmares, and hair styling. I was afraid to ask about HIS background.)

6/7/89-(5)

...and Kyroot said:

Even those who dance with themselves must still pay a portion of the cover charge.

...and Kyroot said:

After a particularly stimulating reading interlude, one lad gazed into the semi-depths of space and mused, "Wow, it would have been great to actually be alive during the time of Colridge, Wordsworth, and Tennyson.", and the voice of Lord Alfred replied, "Aye, my boy, looking back on it now I think the same thing."

...and Kyroot said:

There was this one star I once sojourned where even I did not long tarry, when I discovered that all of their fairy tales, and heroic myths concerned people from marvelous kingdoms who undertook the most strenuous adventures so as to travel to quite plain, and ordinary places.

...and Kyroot said:

I relate this to you, as usual, with no editorial comment intended;
so-called "hero" of one
constellation had as his motto
as follows, "Fuck bittersweet,"...
and really, the people LOVED
him.

...and Kyroot said:

When asked his age one guy would say, "I'm part nineteen."

...and Kyroot said:

Really "good advice" is not stuff you gotta do, but good stuff to know about.

...and Kyroot said:

In some societies I've seen, all past generations live with the present
one, this includes those long expired... (and this arrangement
does not depend on the acquiescence of the living
lineage.)

...and Kyroot said:

In some places, talking about something ALWAYS makes it sound more serious.

...and Kyroot said:

One philosopher from that grasping galaxy recently stated, "Having a nasty little habit is like having another partner in the firm."

...and Kyroot said:

Poetic fluffery notwithstanding, if you wanna hold on to a relationship
forget "counting the ways
I love thee."-

just
forget
all
about
it.

...and Kyroot said:

There was this one famous guy who was so into "humbleness" that he wrote
his autobiography under a pseudonym.

...and Kyroot said:

The dreams potatoes have of heroes only come in two flavors: those of super potatoes, and those of any other vegetable but potatoes.

(Although this obviously has mortal pertinence, I do find
it a quaint bit of tuber
trivia.)

...and Kyroot said:

One guy explained that in his attempt to "get his way" he would oftimes act as though he were going to die, and
a friend opined that that wouldn't really get you
anywhere, and the guy asked,
"You mean dying, or
acting like you're
gonna die?"

(...you're not waiting on
an answer, are you?)

...and Kyroot said:

Piece of an unfinished dialogue:

"Don't look for morals where none exist."

"And where might that be?"

(Let me interrupt here and
note two possible responses
to the question, one is,
"You figure it out.", and
the other is, "Everywhere.",
and now back to our show.)

...and Kyroot said:

There was this partially refurbished chap who used to begin many of his comments by saying, "I probably shouldn't be telling you this...",and then one day for absolutely no accountable reason he seemed to have taken his own advice.