

...and Kyroot said:

One guy put it this way, "No matter where I look, no matter what I see, and more it becomes
just a reflection of my involvement
with 'This'...so little time, so much to think about."

*
...and Kyroot said:

*
Being the ordinary worker in Life's mortal enterprise is experiencing the "freedom of adventure"
without the adventure...and
without the freedom
for that matter.

...and Kyroot said:

A Real Revolutionist may continue to operate even with a broken thermostat, or with a wayward compass.

...and Kyroot said:

If you understand that all of mans' singularities, his soul, his spirit,
and consciousness are all intellectual,
and if you understand that all of the intellect is in the brain, and if you understand that the brain is all chemical, then, by gawd, you've about
got Round One
rounded up.

...and Kyroot said:

"Hey look," he said, "This is important; If you knew something REALLY amazing, and then forgot it does it still count for something, that you did once know it?...well, does it?"

And his other half
said, "I'm thinking,
I'm thinking."

...and Kyroot said:

In some certain distant battles, the generals with the most medals and biggest umlauts get the biggest bullets.

...and Kyroot said:

Continual-thinking-when-you-don't-have-to does have the downside
of tending to interfere
with the specious comfort
of all First Stories.

...and Kyroot said:

Having a blow-out at ninety miles an hour is no problem; wearing your good suit at
the time however,
could prove
awkward.

...and Kyroot said:

Whilst visiting that star over there I've mentioned before, I found the following neatly printed on a water closet wall:

"Ordinary philosophy is the attempt to wipe your ass in a snow storm; Ordinary religion is the attempt to dry your eyes in a typhoon; Ordinary art is the attempt to wet your whistle in a desert; and, Ordinary thinking is the attempt to become more athletic by studying baseball stats."

...and Kyroot said:

A musician said, "I played for a bit in the Count Basie band.", and a by-standing listener asked,
"What did the Count think of your playing?", and the voice replied, "Oh, this was some time after the Count's
death.", and the
listener-voice mused,
"Is there ANY possible
way I can use this in living my life?"

...and Kyroot said:

This new ole-sorehead spat out his opinon that, and here we faithfully
quote, "Most people's thinking operations have about
the same significance
as low cholesterol
cyanide."

...and Kyroot said:

There is a little known band of transient radicals in a certain polyglot galaxy who have as their verbal vexillum the following:
"There is only the one
question - 'What IS the desired
result'?"

...and Kyroot said:

One near-by thinker-chap recently said, "It has become my opinion that Real Revolutionists do not do re-writes.", and his equally nearby brother replied, "That would explain why much of what they say sounds so un-re-written, all right!"

...and Kyroot said:

The stainless-steel-question-of-the-day: If space is to matter as time
is to energy then would space
be filled with nouns, and time
with verbs?

...and Kyroot said:

You may believe-it-or-don't, but it IS the most common ills that require the radical treatments.

...and Kyroot said:

You can coast through time, or you can coast through space, but you cannot do both...unless you know how.

...and Kyroot said:

Question: What ages faster than yesterday's fads and follies?

Answer: Their criticisms and parodies.

Next Question: Does this have any possible
pertinence to me?

Next Answer: I'm thinking - I'm thinking.

...and Kyroot said:

On most visible planets almost everyone feels a little uneasy just being alive.

...and Kyroot said:

*

In 3-D universes if "success" were to be judged strictly on the basis of success there would BE no success.

...and Kyroot said:

... ..
Tis not unknown for a Real-Explorer to live his life from the inside out.