

...and Kyroot said:

On this one quite swift little planetoid there's a guy who I predict may finally give prognostication a good name; (albeit with a certain twist): his "headline/come-on" is as follows, "Tell me what's going on already, and I'LL tell YOU it's significance."

...and Kyroot said:

After being shown an X-ray, a CAT-scan, and a full length, color
polaroid of his own brain,
this one chap stepped back
and said, "Oh no, you're not getting ME in one of those things."

...and Kyroot said:

On his interplanetary travels this one little scholar would oftimes
read a scrap of paper his father had handed him the day of his first departure, it said, "A trick shot in Tulsa ain't shit in Sheboygan.", and for some reason he'd always feel better for a little while.

...and Kyroot said:

All gods are born pagan, but once they become civilized they buy suits,
get married, and just generally -
"blow it."

...(No one's really interested in a grown-up-god.)

...and Kyroot said:

A corset adjuster I supped with accidentally on that glazed planet told me that to keep a clear distinction to himself between his "factual knowledge", and his "opinions" he called them both, the Maxwell Brothers

...and Kyroot said:

If the irrelevant is not meaningful to you then you're part OF the irrelevant.

...and Kyroot said:

This one person recently wrote me and said he's certain that he has at least, partially "found me out"...he says that anyone who can simply "play around with words" like I do can seem to be intelligent.

...part of the fun in being found out is in being partially found out.

...and Kyroot said:

In another place exists an unusual travel agent who sells one-way tickets; you may ask, "what's unusual about that?", so let me tell you the dual singularities of the enterprise; First, they sell ONLY one-way tickets, and second, the tickets are guaranteed to be unconditionally, absolutely, irreversibly - ONE WAY.

...and Kyroot said:

After years of concern, and much reflection regarding the kid's active physical life, yet inattention to his intellectual growth
the father one day,
grabbed him firmly by
the shoulders, looked
him deeply in the eyes,
and said, "Son, you can
exercise
all you want to."

...and Kyroot said:

Along with his patent application he enclosed a cover letter that said, if needed, he had, in his basement, a full, working model
of Jonathan Swift.

...and Kyroot said:

Talk is what humans do while awaiting their next assignment.

...and Kyroot said:

This one out-of-towner - and I mean seriously out-of-town, said that what he finds most unusual about life here is that in the sequence of, "fear - myth - ritual" earth men run it backwards.

...and Kyroot said:

Although scorned, and rebuked, the power of cliches is such that every aspiring intellectual star must therewith
do some public battle.

...and Kyroot said:

When this one guy discovered that a song called, "Precious Memories"
made him cry, well, that was all HE needed to know.

...and Kyroot said:

An anacronistic myth is no big deal...

...in fact, one myth said,
"Wow — I'm so far out of sync I think I'll become a religion."

...and Kyroot said:

And still this other guy I met, (who says his goal is to "write a column", and if that doesn't work out, to be one), after looking thoughtful for a while propounded the following, said he,
"Those who continue to confuse fear and good-taste will at least always have something to be afraid of."

...and Kyroot said:

For those in a hurry, and with real good ears, the world's shortest moralistic fable - ten words,
"The panting dog said, "You think I LIKE chasing cats?"

...and Kyroot said:

In a striking display of enthusiasm, if not electrified bile, one ole sorehead shouted out,
"O.k., all you 'forty-watters',
if there IS any basis for believing in the benevolence
of fate, and the serendipity
of chance, why don't we ever just 'accidentally' spell
a real hard word correctly?"

...and Kyroot said:

One well honed father, in an attempt to encourage, and in a coup de maitre
of condensation, said to his son,
"Why sweat it?, just look at this
as a prelude
to the conclusion."

...and Kyroot said:

While over in Bill's Bar, you know, over on Bill's Planet, I overheard the following conversation; this one guy says, "I heard that over on Francine's Planet they've banned erasers, apologies, delete keys and correcting tape.", and his inbibbling companion retorted, "Hell, why didn't they save time and just outlaw brains."

...and Kyroot said:

O.k., I'll admit it...I'll even say it for you - its h-a-a-r-d to PLAN for a revolution.