As long as you don't know anything you can believe whatever is handy.

...and Kyroot said:

Everyone is born mentally overweight.

...and Kyroot said:

Men of limited, but predictable vision, run the world,
And they invite you to join them;
You do so by either accepting or rejecting their offer.

...and Kyroot said:

Everyone is born favoring one leg or the other.

...and Kyroot said:

The more grave and grandiose the scheme, the smaller the minds it is meant to feed.

...and Kyroot said:

Common is the energy that entertains captive minds;

If no tv is available -- they will watch a clothes dryer, or even other people think.

...and Kyroot said:

Those who forget the, "One foot in a bucket of slop principle" are doomed to always limp.

...and Kyroot said:

Men with little piss-ant mental lives must cautiously guard them.

...(also their related reputation and good name.)

...and Kyroot said:

As regards man, "the-thinking-potential creature":

We're all on a trip, but most are going no where.

...and Kyroot said:

To take gravity, rain, denseness, and limited vision seriously is to take YOU seriously.

...and Kyroot said:

All men have two minds, and for certain purposes, one of them is not worth a damn.

...and Kyroot noted:

The Pattern Expands: The dumb must be serious -- the serious, defensive.

Bumper sticker spotted in other reality:

Guns Don't Kill People -- Hormones Do.

...and Kyroot said:

No matter how distasteful the discourse,
The ordinary will pay to hear their ordinary condition described;
But not so regarding what they might could be.

...and from Kyroot:

Query ': What is probably the easiest thing in the world to hide?

Query -Crusher: How dumb you really are.

...and Kyroot notes:

Cows with their own kind never have cause to be ashamed.

...and Kyroot said:

Pride and self-pity are understandable outgrowths of men initially realizing how dense other people are.

...and Kyroot said:

The reason mental "life boats" seem unfulfilling in life is that
Half the passengers are pushing them away while the other half try to pull them along side.

...and Kyroot said:

A one eyed man is a satisfied man -- pleased with the comfort of his limited sight.

.....then Kyroot described:

A part time neural rebel: One who can swim some -- but not past himself.

...and Kyroot said:

A sharper mind might come to think of man as mentally having a "Right-brain", and a "left-foot-in-a-bucket-of-slop-brain".

..and Kyroot said:

In their secondary lives the dumb always feel defensive.

And from even further away, an extended bumper sticker:

Pesticides Don't Kill People -- PERIODS Do.

...and Kyroot pointed:

Who BUT the blind are properly qualified to direct the blind.

...and Kyroot said:

A man not mortified and outraged at his everyday denseness is not capable of any real embarrassment.

...and Kyroot defined:

The dumb: Those who believe every idea has two sides and one worthy of defending.

...and Kyroot said;

Imitation is the sorriest form of anything --- especially thinking.

...and Kyroot said:

Each time he touches the cell walls a man reaffirms his captivity.

...and Kyroot said:

The dumb are easily insulted -- on a variety of counts.

...and Kyroot said:

A man is truly only captive when he neurally takes sides, and becomes defensive.

...and Kyroot asks:

What is more pathetic than a normal mental cripple?

Answer: One who ONCE got up and walked.

...and Kyroot said:

Dogs lick sores -- the captive, their defensive positions.

...and Kyroot said:

A naked mind won't run --

And the first clothes it's given are too small and meant to last a lifetime.

...and Kyroot said:

The most striking example of antithetical concepts to a rebel mind should perhaps be Between the notions of "neural independence, and defensiveness"

...and Kyroot said:

Things that are a dead giveaway to an independent mind are just dead to others.

...and Kyroot said:

Only the foolish talk of freedom -- an intelligent man thinks in terms of neural non-alignment, and relative independence.

...and Kyroot said:

A man is truly only dumb when he takes his dumb thoughts to be his thoughts.

...and Kyroot said:

Part of life's own protective mechanism:

Making freedom easy to talk about, and impossible to achieve --
And mental independence unworthy of note.

...and Kyroot said:

The captive's standard response to offers of freedom is: "I don't like it."

...and Kyroot said:

The ordinary are protected by their blandness -- the dense by their denseness,
But one striving for neural independence must shun all safeguards.

...and Kyroot said:

Being "neurally common" is its own form of captivity.

...and Kyroot said:

Things with no routine "rhyme or reason" can "call up" an alert mind in the middle of the night.

...and Kyroot said:

A man who won't separate from himself will never BE himself.

...and Kyroot said:

Neural peace comes at the expense of defensiveness --
The value of which to some, is non-existent.

...and Kyroot said:

The mentally independent will not plug into a routine wall socket.

...and Kyroot said:

To be non-aligned and mentally free
Is to be as free as a human can be.

...and Kyroot said:

A rebel mind does not take the noise of electricity to be the sound of his stereo.

...and Kyroot said:

Some would prefer to die alone in the virgin neural forests
Than to wait out existence in the company of the ordinary.

...and Kyroot said:

To spirited minds --

Non-aligned ideas are like "music to the ears" -- even when they're not sung.

...and Kyroot said:

Rather than the gradual, peaceful death of captivity,
An independent thinker would prefer to be shot, point-blank between the eyes.
