

Real thinking is for grown ups -- and life only operates grade schools.

The ordinary feel a pretty immediate connection to the rest of the ordinary.

 Compare if you dare. **

...and Kyroot said:

Dialogue In The Key Of C, (Opus 27):

"Many people discover a new land, but only one takes the credit."

"Don't you mean only one GETS the credit?"

"Those who see distinctions where none before existed should either,
stay home,
change their name to Columbus,
or get a Visa Card in their mama's name."

A man thought & wondered:

"I understand that to stay alert and healthy

The human nervous system must be in a constant state of irritation --

But Hey! -- THIS irritated?!"

The safety and spurious solitude of "herd life" is that cows never know they're IN one.

It is to the advantage of the dense to be attractive --
And if not that, then -- serious.

A man who can think can laugh.

When it comes to confinement -- which inmates might find captivity most tolerable?:
The blind and deaf?,
Or the lame and mute?

* What reply could be possibly pertinent

Once you realize that the senses themselves are a type of prison. *

...(In this regard you might care to

... Consider that further step the independent minded like to make Wherein they include the intellect as an additional sense.)

Being civilizedly alive:

*Is being where everyone is always on the way to a very important conference.....
.....that never gets started.*

Plain people are testy people.

(Life survives mainly on plain people.)

The main thing in the herd is to have something to sell.

Only ordinary thinking -- following the ordinary course --
Ever thinks that the road is becoming unseemly cluttered, or impassable.

* IF the brain could feel and laugh -- it'd feel tickled over specious challenges, and spurious set-backs. *

...(Leave it to the nerves to "get things straight!" --
...on your off-day,
in your dreams,
and maybe in the next life.)

To be "intelligent" in the sea of the collective
Is to be equally level in your bobbing and bouncing
Amidst the other debris of the ship wreck

The independent minded do not look for their future in any place that shows.

Some people seem to feel more than others;
Some people do feel more than others;
The civilized wonder why everybody doesn't.

Serious, "personal relationships" are,
Within the herd,
Both a means of systemic, structure strengthening,
AND a potential for individual homicide.

An expert who's an expert in someone else's field
Is of scant use to the independent minded.

Though it is obvious that men hear with two ears,
Walk with two legs,
And see with two eyes,
The ordinary continue to assume that he thinks and speaks but with a single actor.

Every day of your youth

You have the opportunity to go for a ride:

How often do you go?

...(Note that we won't bother to ask those who need the question put into the past tense.)

Some people feel more than others;
Some people are taller than others.

If it actually doesn't matter what you think -- then those who know this are having all the fun!!

At an expanded level however,

The term, "doesn't matter" might operationally translate as:

"The difference between knowing what's going on and not".

Mere "indifference" carries little value in non partisan thinking.

When it comes to certain matters intellectual -- (Such as, independent, non partisan thinking) --
Those who can "Be a good sport" ain't no sport at all.

To be mentally passive is to be a patsy.

What is going on here?!, young Duke and Duchess?!

Would it not seem that the harm done by words could likewise be UN-done?!

(Are other systems in play here perhaps, when harsh human sounds are made.)

, The dense have one another.

Rather than run the risk of having to actually make some intellectual effort,
This one man would simply pick up an idea someone else had already had
And let gravity take its course.

Captives easily accept repetition.

Second Stanza:

Captives easily accept repetition, and the dense find little difference.

Third Verse:

Now do you understand how institutions survive.

Those who talk of guilt have no human heart.

Cows who can smile while being called one -- are no longer just cows.

However: In the city when men attain a specific position,
They wish continual note made thereof.

In the brain of this one irritable man,
The small connecting branches of his neurons ended in diatribes.

People who nod their head in agreement --
With the truth when they hear it --
Never hear the truth.

* The greatest law of physics is The Law Of Balance. *

One day,
In this other universe,
The Law Of Balance said that it was going to take a vacation;
The punch line to this story is either that:
It never said this -- or,
It did, and no one heard it.

 Amongst the many other dualities,
Man has two ears so that he may be SPARED from having TO hear "certain things". **

The collective herd supports the ordinary;
Tolerates the talented,
But suffers little the independent.

Fish who fight the water are never free.

The main purpose of talk is talk.

If you take the time to criticize someone else's ideas
That means that you thought theirs were better than yours to begin with.

-- Just what is it that you believe you're up to?!

Never ask a child if he would jump over a cliff just because the herd did Because he will want to give you two answers, but won't know how.

Medical Update, cum fait accompli:

Let the dumb treat the dumb for dumb maladies.

The ordinary mind attempts to sharpen itself through the Abrasive, partisan conduct of,
This-against-that --- pro-against-con;
But the independent minded eventually find
Little use for a keen blade when all the local game is so bereft of nourishment.

Words can explain anything ---- except why they're here.

Civilization & City-Life: Point-blank-reality -- all fancied up.

Ordinary, standard-issue cows -- sensing their lack of originality --
Tend to dress up their external world in ever-increasing, inventive, verbal adornment.

With the independent-of-mind, there is no such thing as an "intellectual anomaly."

Critics always have one another -- and those they criticize.

Intellectual, "duplication of services"

Is only needed by those who now lack the original ability.

* Those who can't properly think-once will press onward to do so twice. *

Point-blank-walls offer no second chances --

For those who can face up to them -- need none.

To be intellectually civilized is to think in indelible ink.

The independently minded are, at times,
Not totally sure whether they are completely civilized or not.

The monotony of collective affairs is in that
Only bovine tunes are played in herd ballrooms.

* Leather-of-a-feather's gonna stick together! *

(Sanity not stable is NO-0-0 sanity at all.)

Don't talk to the dead.

The fact that the brain is more round than it is square, or angular
Should give you a hint --

...(well, I guess according to how hard up you are for a hint!)

Cows who talk about freedom are fools;
Men who dream about it -- cows in sport coats;
Only those struggling against the strangulation of partisan thinking
Are actually DOING anything about it.

Institutions: Prisons with better p.r.

Collectively speaking: The herd never lays down on the job.

The ultimate secret is a man who can think in a secret way.

Everything public is repetitious.

Everything repetitious is a waste of time.

Those who ultimately need one another -- HAVE one another.

Remember now: It's COWS -- not brains -- that can lay down on the job and still get their work done.

Non partisan thinking has no "fine print".

Well, hey! --

If everybody could just "insightfully lighten up" -- well, hey! --
The whole herd could fall-l-l a-part!.

(The head herd keeper may have called to say that

You still oughta watch that kinda talk!

...[Ahhh!, he didn't really -- but who cares!])

Below the herd is nothing.

.....(nothing for COWS).

All knowledge is "made up": Therefore: Those who know nothing -- know everything.

-- This can be understood in two totally different ways.
